Cook's "A Shadow of All Night Falling" (which I read in the Kindle edition of his omnibus A Cruel Wind) is the first of the main sequence books in his "Dread Empire" series (the other two books in the main sequence ("October's Baby" and "All Darkness Met") are also in that omnibus). This book is a very early example (1979) of Glen Cook's writing.

The Dread Empire is a dark epic fantasy series by Glen Cook. Though its earliest volumes predate Cook's more famous Black Company series by several years, the two share a number of similarities in themes and tone, offering a soldier's-eye view of a gritty, morally grey world in the throes of conflict driven by larger-than-life sorcerers and immortals.
