This book is such a weird power fantasy. Heroes must be tall brawny. Villains are short and have brown skin. The liberal president is somehow weak and ineffectual and a renegade controlling, domineering evil leader at the same time? Inner cities are bad. Cops that shoot 8 year old children are "clear headed" and good. It's also really poorly ...

This book was problematic in so many ways, but I think it was supposed to be so I won't judge it on that. I love CoHo so much and I wanted to love this book, but it wasn't for me. I just didn't enjoy it. It was captivating and kept my attention 100%, but I found myself not connecting and not really liking any of the characters.

An excerpt from the new book reads: "Siraj had lost his father during the statutory period of 14 days hard quarantine in Australia in November. What this meant was that none of his teammates could even go to his room to give him a shoulder to cry on. At the time there were cops outside every room just in case the Indians tried to violate protocol.
