Annotations are an important part of every drawing. The easier way to achieve the Best Practice for technical Drawing and CAD described earlier using BIM and AutoCAD is to use annotative elements (annotative text, annotative dimensions, annotative leaders, etc.) Those are annotative by default in BIM software. However, you still need to know how you want them to look.

I am a designer at a new company that does not have any drafting standards. I ordered the ASME 14.100 Engineering Drawing Practices book so we would have a good base for our standards and the book is honestly a joke for $120. It doesn't really have a lot of info and anything helpful. It just says, for example, for lettering see section ANSI 260.1.
